What's More Important Than Sunday Worship?

May 16, 2017 by Jack Wilkie Part 1

I'm just going to get straight to the point with this one. I want to know – what's more important than Sunday worship?

Because thousands of articles have been written and sermons preached, and yet I still have regular discussions with my preacher friends about how many people are missing on a given Sunday for other activities. Obviously there are many, many Christians who believe there are things more important than being at worship. So I want to know... what is it that's so important? What's going on elsewhere that outranks God?

Obviously I'm not talking about those who are shut-ins, those who are dealing with a sickness, or those who have the unavoidable work assignment from time to time. I'm talking about those who feel like they have something better to do. To them I ask:

- What's more important than worshipping God in the few hours per week set aside specifically for Him?
- What's more important than making time to encourage and be encouraged by your Christian family?
- What's more important than gathering with them to study God's word and share in prayers for each other?
- What's more important than remembering the sacrifice of Jesus by partaking in communion with your fellow Christians?
