Remedies for Judging Part I

By Wendell Winkler, in Heart Diseases and Their Cure

1) Love. Love is always slow to expose, always eager to believe the best, always hopeful, always patient (1 Corinthians 13:7; cf. 1 Peter 4:8). The faults of others will appear thick if our love for them is thin.

2) Consider how despicable it is. Matthew 7:3 suggests the censorious judge anxiously looks for a fault upon which to pounce. He is a "picker." How despicable! The critic is always actuated by improper motives (John 12:4-6).

3) Practice the golden rule (Matthew 7:12). Substituting "think and judge" for "do" in this passage makes it read, "Whatsoever ye would that man should think and judge of you, do ye even so to them." This would eliminate unkind censoring.

4) Examine self (1 Corinthians 11:28; 2 Corinthians 13:5). Upon examining self we will see that "there is so much good in the worst of us, and so much bad in the best of us, that it little behooves any of us to talk about the rest of us." So, when looking for faults, use a mirror and not a telescope.
