Last Words By: Brent Petrillo

It seemed to be just like any other Sunday and any other sermon. Darren Holt, the preacher for the Figueroa church of Christ in Los Angeles, delivered his final sermon October 25, 2015. As he came to the end of his lesson, he stepped down from the podium and told the congregation he needed to sit down.

While resting on the front pew, and in his final breaths, he uttered the words, "If you're not a Christian, say yes to Him. You've heard the Word. Believe it. Repent of your sins, confess Christ, be baptized."

After these words, Darren Holt became unresponsive. Several members with medical training administered CPR until the paramedics arrived and rushed him to the hospital. Sadly, all efforts were unsuccessful. He passed away a short time later at the hospital. He had drawn his last breath, uttered his last words, and taken his last action.

Every breath we take brings us closer to our last. We do not know when our final life-sustaining draw will be. While we should not live in a panic, we need to live with a sense of urgency. We do not know what our lives will be like tomorrow, or even if we will have a tomorrow (James 4:14). Therefore, let's seize the moment. Let's fix what needs fixing. Let's use every breath we take today for good and for God.
